

Good morning, everyone. Thank you for being here today to listen to my speech. Today, I'll be talking about Independence Day, and if I make any mistakes, please forgive me. Today is 15th August. On this day, we gained freedom from British rule. On 15th August 1947, our country was liberated from British dominance. This day not only reminds us of our past under British rule but also honors those who sacrificed their lives for our freedom.

From 1857 to 1947, we struggled for independence from British rule, finally achieving it after many sacrifices. Today, Independence Day is celebrated as a national festival across India. The excitement for India's independence grew after the British brutally shot Mangal Pandey, sparking a determination among Indians to drive out the British. Many revolutionaries lost their lives over decades of struggle. Mahatma Gandhi, a pioneer of non-violence, led peaceful movements that contributed significantly. Finally, on 15th August 1947, India achieved complete freedom, and Indians took charge of their own country.

Now, we can freely pursue our aspirations in our country without restrictions, thanks to our prolonged struggle.

Thank you.
